

Jacob's Journey Ends

Genesis 29:1-14; Patriarchs and Prophets, p. 188

Think of a time someone in your family helped you without being asked. What did they do for you? Did their kindness surprise you? Our story this week reminds us of something important: we learn how to serve others by being kind at home.

It was morning, and Jacob woke up to continue on his long journey to Haran. He had left his home because his brother was very angry with him. Jacob had tricked his father and had gotten a special blessing that should have gone to his brother. Because of this, his mom thought it was a good idea for him to go and stay with her brother Laban for a while. She also hoped that Jacob would find a wife there.

The night before, while he had slept with a stone for his pillow, he had had a dream. He had dreamed that he had seen a ladder and angels going up and down on the ladder. Then God had spoken to him and had promised to be with him. Jacob worshipped God when he woke up and had promised that God would be his God. Now he was ready to continue on his journey.

It was a long journey, about 450 miles altogether. It would take many weeks of walking. Finally, after many days and nights of traveling, Jacob neared the city of Haran. He hoped to find his mother's family there. His journey was almost over, and he was glad.

On the outskirts of Haran, Jacob saw a well. It was about noon, and three flocks of sheep were gathered there. Why are these flocks at the well in the middle of the day? he wondered. This well was different from those near Jacob's home. He saw that a huge stone covered the well's opening. There were no troughs from which the sheep could drink. Jacob approached the well and spoke to the shepherds gathered there.

"My brothers, where are you from?" he asked.

"We come from Haran," one shepherd replied.

"Do you know a man named Laban who lives there?" Jacob questioned.

"Yes, we know him," the shepherds answered.

Then Jacob asked, "Is he well?" "Yes, he is," replied one of the shepherds. "In fact, here comes his daughter, Rachel, with some of his sheep. She is a shepherdess." The man pointed to a young woman coming toward them. Jacob looked and saw Rachel coming to the well. She was lead-flock of sheep, but was still some distance away.

Jacob continued talking with the shepherds. "Tell me, why don't you water your sheep and take them back to pasture?" he asked. "There is still a lot of daylight left."

"We can't," they replied. "It's our custom to wait until all of the flocks are gathered. When all are here, we remove the big stone from the well. Then all the animals drink, and we cover the well again."

While Jacob and the shepherds talked together, Rachel and her sheep arrived. Jacob went over to the well. He kindly rolled the heavy stone away from the opening. Then he led his uncle Laban's sheep to the water and cared for them.

He spoke kindly to Rachel. "I am Jacob, and I am one of your relatives. I've come a long way to meet your family! Your father's sister Rebekah is my mother." He was so glad to finally meet a relative that he began to cry! His long journey was over. He was with family again.

"Please, wait right here!" Rachel exclaimed. "I want to let my father know that you are here." Then she turned quickly and ran toward home.

An excited Rachel told her father about Jacob. Laban was amazed that Jacob had come so far. He hurried back to the well with her. "How wonderful to meet you, Jacob!" he exclaimed. He hugged his nephew and kissed his cheeks (that was their custom). "We're so glad you're here! Come, let's go home so we can visit!"

Laban led the way. Soon they reached Laban's home. There Jacob told his uncle about the family he had left behind. He talked about his mother, Rebekah, and how she had sent Jacob to Laban. And Uncle Laban welcomed his nephew Jacob into his home. Soon Jacob became a part of Laban's family.

Yes, Jacob helped Rachel by removing the heavy stone from the well. And he helped her by watering the sheep. No one had to ask him to help. He showed courtesy and kindness to Rachel. Can you help others without being asked? By being kind to your own family, you learn to serve others. What will you do to serve others this week?

S A B B A T H

With your family, go to a place where sheep are kept. If possible, count the sheep. Ask your family: What do sheep need most? Or look at a book about sheep. What kind of care do they need? Thank God for the animals you enjoy.

Share the lesson story with your family. Teach them the memory verse. (Use the motions learned in Sabbath School.)

S U N D A Y

Read and discuss Genesis 29:1-3 during family worship today. Talk about the end of Jacob's journey. What did he see? Why do you think the well was covered?

Look at the house drawing or floor plan made in Sabbath School (or draw one). Use it to remind you to show kindness to your family this week. Be sure to surprise them!

M O N D A Y

During worship today, read and discuss Genesis 29:4-6. What did Jacob call the shepherds? What did he ask them? How did they reply? Did the shepherds know Jacob? Why do you think they talked with him?

Make a paper with columns for "home," "school," and "neighborhood." For one week, keep track of times someone did something kind for you at each of those places. Thank Jesus for people who are kind.

T U E S D A Y

For worship today, read and discuss Genesis 29:7 and 8. What did Jacob think the shepherds should do? Why didn't they do it? Do you always have to do things the way others do them? Why? Give an example.

Ask Jesus to help you accept differences in others. Think of someone who is different from you in some way and pray for them.

W E D N E S D A Y

With your family, read and discuss Genesis 29:9-12. How did Jacob serve Rachel? How did Rachel serve Jacob?

How were Jacob and Rachel related? How are you related to your aunt's or uncle's children? Think of some way you can show kindness to one of them this week.

Sing "A Happy Home" (Sing for Joy, no. 136) or "Love at Home" (Sing for Joy, no. 137). Then thank Jesus for your relatives and ask Him to help you serve them with kindness.

THURSDAY

READ

Read and discuss Genesis 29:13 and 14 for worship today. Why do you think Laban hurried to meet Jacob? What did he do when they met? What do you think Jacob and Laban talked about? Read verse 14 again. What did Laban mean?

DO

Trace around your foot on a piece of paper. Cut it out. Write on it one thing you can do using your feet to help someone. (Take out the trash; walk the dog; play with someone who doesn't have many friends; etc.) Do it tomorrow. Put the footprint by your bed so you will step on it to remind you in the morning.

FRIDAY

DO

For worship tonight, act out the lesson story. Who will be Jacob and Rachel? Ask everyone who they would like to be. Review the memory verse together before prayer.

DO

Think of someone who needs Jesus' help and pray for them. Tell Jesus what you think they need. (to know He loves them; to get well; to trust in Him if worried; etc.) Ask Jesus to do what is best. Then thank Him for hearing and answering your prayers.
